Hi Gary,

The Coalition is hosting a community forum next week in regards to the Waste Pits settlement funds. As always, I will give an update for the Site. Is there anything in particular I should note to the community?

Fox 26 ran a segment about barge activity a few weeks ago after they received calls from community members. In response, I am receiving an increase of calls about barge concerns and I simply don't know all of the answers. Since community members are still very concerned about the continued growth of barge activity near the Site, I will briefly discuss this topic at the forum so I have a few questions.

I believe it is remedial alternative 3 that considers deed restrictions. Is it the EPA that would implement these restrictions? I am glad to see the restrictions being considered but will they be considered for other alternatives?

If deed restrictions are implemented, who can the community count on to ensure the barge companies are complying? Is it the land owner (which I assume is Waste Management of Texas?) or is there an agency that oversees the restriction?

It is nice to be able to assure community members that the ACOE is considering barge activity and that one of the alternatives is considering deed restrictions but I would like to give them more of a concrete assurance that the EPA shares their concerns and is fully considering the issue.

Also, an environmental manager/geologist from the University of Houston is concluding a report over the Site and I should have it to you by the end of the month.

Thank you,
Jackie Young
